3rd Annual American Indian & Alaska Native Long Term Care Conference

Abstracts due Monday, April 30, 2007

About Long Term Care

- Long term care is the care of an Elder or individual with a disability who requires on-going assistance with daily living activities such as bathing, dressing, eating, shopping, and cooking.
- Long term care supports elders and their families with medical, personal, and social services delivered in a variety of settings, ranging from a person's own home to institutional settings, to ensure quality of life, maximum independence, and dignity.
- In American Indian and Alaska Native communities, long term care also involves maintaining cultural values in the delivery system.

Abstract Purpose

Long term care programs and service providers that are successfully meeting the needs of their communities are requested to present at the 3rd Annual American Indian and Alaska Native Long Term Care Conference scheduled for September 5-6, 2007, in Albuquerque, New Mexico. The Conference Planning Committee is looking forward to identifying programs to share and learn with participants about what is working for long term care in Indian Country.

Abstract Submission

To submit an abstract focusing on the best practices of your program, please respond to the questions below and limit your response to approximately 400 words. Be sure to be as specific as possible. Submit abstract to lrc@nicoa.org or fax to (505) 292-1922 on or before April 30, 2007.

- What is the population served by your program? Please indicate rural or urban.
- What are the specific services offered by your program?
- How did you identify the need for these services?
- What is the length of time the program/services have been offered?
- How are the program/services financially supported?
- How do you measure the success of your program?

Also, please include your name, title, organization, address, telephone number, fax, email, and a brief biography with your abstract submission on or before the deadline of April 30, 2007. If you are selected, you will be notified before May 31, 2007, in order to register at the early bird conference rate.

Abstracts Deadline: April 30, 2007
